Two Coaches, Piner High School and Title IX

Written by Joan Fleck

Remember the days when you couldn't find anything about girl's and women's sports in the newspaper because, well, it wasn't there? And how great is it that on any given day, these days, articles about female athletes and teams with action photos are front page news. We can even watch televised games and matches on major sports channels ranging from the girls' softball little league world series, to NCAA competitions and women's professional sports.

How did we get from there to here? As the saying goes, we've come a long way baby.

The history of girl's and women's sports in America is inspiring, also disturbing with decades of societal suppression, oppression, discrimination, and antiquated attempts to protect and preserve femininity, even fertility. Seriously. One of the many non-sensical concerns, as an example, was sports would make girls (heaven forbid) too competitive. Spoiler Alert No. 1 – sports don't make girls competitive; girls are competitive, wanting to compete in sports.

But it is also a powerful story of perseverance, passion, and enduring strength, with girls and women refusing to take no for an answer, and heroes all across the country including high school coaches never losing step with the drum beat march toward equal opportunity.

Two of those competitive girls who didn't take no for an answer, becoming Piner High School female sport heroes are Patricia (Pat) Sampson and Betty Castino. They dedicated their lives as educators and coaches with careers straddling the enactment of Title IX, essentially placing them "in the room where it happened."

Ms. Betty Castino Piner Career 1972-2003

Coach Sampson

Coach Sampson grew up in Washougal, Washington, originally wanting to be a singer and dancer, just like in the movies. She also thought about becoming a math teacher, being good at algebra but geometry not so much. Then she found sports, excelling in volleyball, basketball and softball at Washougal High under the skilled coaching of her fondly remembered mentor, Marcella Swanson. Pat was the athlete in the family with an older brother showing no interest or aptitude. In Pat's words, "she could not be without sports." Her mother wasn't keen on the idea of her daughter becoming a coach, but with church members cheering her on, Pat graduated from Central Washington State in 1957.

Editor's Note: A special thank you to Pat Sampson and Betty Castino for sharing their life stories including their professional careers at Piner High School. Many people today are unaware that it was ever any different for female athletes and their coaches. Their stories shed light on how it was, and how the 1972, Title IX legislation changed girl's and women's sports in America, including right here at home.

She knew what it felt like to be a natural born athlete with a competitive heart, without opportunities saying there were enough girls at Washougal High to form a team, but never enough teams to compete against. So, like her coach before her, and her coach before her, Pat set out on a career path teaching physical education while creating competitive opportunities for female athletes.

Her career began in Washington before exploring options in Sonoma County, securing a position at Analy High School. She went right to work putting the girl Tigers on the map by defeating Santa Rosa High School in volleyball and field hockey, rumored to have beaten them so badly, Analy was not invited back. Pat also included flag football in the girls P.E. curriculum, organizing "home" games with the girls suited up wearing the boy's uniforms minus the pads, playing in 4-inches of mud while the boys took care of cheerleading on the sidelines. It had all the makings of school spirited fun and was no doubt educational, preparing girls to have intelligent conversations with the guys about quarterback blitzing, run interference and Hail Mary passes.

One year after Piner High opened, Pat traded in her tiger stripes for burgundy and gold with her basketball teams being competitors from the start. Her '70 team took first in the Healdsburg Rotary sponsored, Girls Athletic Association Tournament, defeating Healdsburg, Rancho Cotati and Fort Bragg (the defending champions) in double overtime. Her '71 team followed suit, taking first in the Santa Rosa Junior College Tournament, this time wearing real uniforms instead of gym clothes and numbered burgundy pinnies (short for pinafores).

In the Spring, Pat fielded softball teams on the rocky (literally) adobe girls' field. She also coached tennis and badminton, and was Piner's second Athletic Director, and first Department Chair.

Coach Castino

Betty Castino was born in Santa Rosa, one of eleven children, growing up on a ranch. As a talented young athlete, her parents were supportive, telling her to do what made her happy, and she did. Betty honed her baseball skills with her brother, David, keeping her throwing arm in shape by playing "burn-out." She attended Slater Junior High, graduating from Montgomery in 1962, where she was inspired and influenced by her coach, Carol Hintze.

Betty stayed local, despite wanting to attend Cal, needing to help care for her mother, studying instead at Santa Rosa Junior College. She also worked a variety of jobs, paying her way through college, including summer salmon fishing in Alaska. Betty's love of sports was so strong, it is likely that her DNA would test out as 50% Italian and 50% Athlete. During her college years, she excelled at field hockey, volleyball, basketball, softball, tennis, fencing and golf. Not surprisingly, by unanimous vote during her senior year at Sonoma State, she was recognized as Student Athlete of the Year.

She completed her student teaching at Piner before securing a position at Altamira Middle School in Sonoma where she solicited interest in forming a girls' basketball team, blown away by the fifty girls lining up for tryouts. She returned to Piner in 1972, teaching physical education and history, also coaching volleyball, tennis and golf, with coaching her primary passion.

Title IX

Then the world of sports changed dramatically. On June 23, 1972, a historic milestone was reached with the enactment of Title IX, also known as the Patsy T. Mink Equal Opportunity in Education Act, prohibiting discrimination based on sex in education programs and activities that receive federal financial assistance. What did that mean for Piner High School? Good question.

Piner opened its doors in the fall of 1966, and just like every other high school, boys competed for league championships and the potential for post league play. They had budgets to buy uniforms and equipment, pay officials, with away game travel on buses. Exceptional athletes were distinguished with post-season awards, such as all-league team honors, and male coaches were monetarily compensated.

Piner also offered after school sports for girls because Pat Sampson and Betty Castino volunteered their time for practices, games and matches. They arranged "informal" competitions with other schools because leagues didn't exist, and without leagues there weren't any rankings, ratings, championships, post season play or end of season honors. They raised funds to buy uniforms including the infamous candy sales in the girls' gym, and organized parent volunteers for away game transportation. They took turns officiating each other's games, also tapping into Sonoma State student volunteers who were interested in being ranked by the North Coast Officials Association.

Mirror images they were not, needing a path forward. In 1975, President Gerald Ford signed an additional Title IX provision, clarifying (in case there was any doubt) that if an institution operates or sponsors an athletic program, it must provide equal athletic opportunities for members of both sexes. The provision also granted athletic departments three-years for implementation, officially starting the time-clock, a nationwide seismic event felt coast to coast.

In California, the California Interscholastic Federation (CIF), which is charged with the standardization of rules and team structures between schools, stepped up in its leadership role, expanding its governance to include female sports. Concurrently, local district officials, school administrators, athletic directors, league commissioners and coaches worked together to achieve this epic societal shift, legitimizing and affirming female athletes and sports.

As with any significant change, there were celebrations contrasted by some who were not in festive moods, fearing that equal opportunity gains for girls meant losses for boys. However, the local reaction of coaches to the new legislation (as reported in the Press Democrat) was reciprocated support - male coaches were in favor of the development of girls' programs and female coaches wanted to upgrade their programs but not at the expense of the boys' programs. Pat Sampson, Piner's Athlete Director agreed, saying (in her July 1977 Press Democrat interview) that, "she wished the district would approach it by just providing additional money", and added, "you don't take it from the guys to give to the girls because it'll drive sports out, and that would be a big tragedy."

A tragedy didn't happen. What did happen was girls' leagues with all the accoutrements of rankings, championships, and post league competitions were established; the district re-defined budgets as school's athletic budgets; and monetary compensation was provided for coaches independent of gender.

How did Piner fare though the process? According to Pat and Betty, they already felt supported by the administration and in their words, Albert Biella and Robert Zeni were wonderful, as was Jack Hayes. They also described their male colleagues, including Gene McKamey and Mike Gaddie, as very supportive, making it easy to coach while sharing the school's only gym, as one example. So, Piner High School came out on the other side of the Title IX implementation process whole, because Piner was whole to begin with. Title IX changed many things, but something it couldn't change was Piner's unshakable culture, remaining authentically intact through the process.

It didn't take long for Sampson and Castino to herald in the new era of league play with championships. Coach Sampson brought home the first pennant for the gym wall when her '77 basketball team took first in the inaugural North Bay League, going undefeated with an impressive overall record of 26 wins and 2 losses. The team went on to compete in the North Coast Section (NCS) playoffs. Team leader Kristin Bryan was named the league's Most Valuable Player, and was Piner's first female athlete to receive a full scholarship to a four-year college (Cal Poly) for sports.

Coach Castino's undefeated '74 volleyball team preceded sanctioned league awards; however, their success was foretelling. Betty's volleyball teams went on to add five more pennants to the girl's side gym wall, taking Sonoma County League titles in '79, '80, '83 and '84 with the '83 team securing an impressive NCS second place, advancing to the NorCal playoffs. Team leader Tammy Wessendorf was the league's Most Valuable Player, also receiving NCS, All Tournament First Team honors.

Something also notable about the '70s (pre-Title IX) was Pat and Betty were coaching varsity and junior varsity teams. With the Title IX resulting budgets, junior varsity coaches could also be hired, giving the female athletes the attention, they needed. After all, many of the girls arrived at the Title IX crossroads at a deficit not having had the benefit of childhood organized sports like the boys had for decades. Betty helped with some of that "catching up" by also working with the Comstock Middle School volleyball kids, which proved to be valuable - Tammy Wessendorf was one of those Comstock kids.

Pat and Betty each established sound programs, building on them through the Title IX era, opening doors to future girl Prospector successes, and there were more, because – Spoiler Alert No. 2 – girls are not only competitive, they are really good at sprinting fast; running long distances, also fast; slamming volleyballs; smashing birdies; acing tennis serves; shooting three pointers; making double plays and hitting home runs; kicking soccer goals; and pinning their opponents to the mat; and more.

Two things stood out while talking with Pat and Betty about their careers; they loved the kids; and they loved Piner High School. It was a community, and family.

Pat Sampson retired in 1994. She continues to play golf, reporting that her swing is better than ever. She was inducted into the Piner High School Athletic Hall of Fame in 2008.

Betty Castino retired in 2003, enjoying international travel, with more travel planned including a 6th trip to Italy. She was a founding member of the Piner High School Athletic Hall of Fame, also inducted in 2007.

On June 23, 2022, the 50th anniversary of Title IX was celebrated. Thinking back to the 1970s, not only were Coaches Sampson and Castino in the room where it happened, they were part of the force making it happen, reshaping female sports to this place and time where "throwing like a girl" is an esteemed compliment.

PINER HIGH FOUNDATION

As you may know, our annual Crab Feed Fundraiser, in conjunction with the Piner Boosters and the Piner Hall of Fame, was cancelled the last two years. The good news is we are having it this year on Saturday, January 21, 2023. It will be at the same location as in the past—the Friedmen event center. Even though there was a huge loss of revenue in the last two years from not having the crab feed we were still able to fund the all of the teachers that applied for the Bob Zeni Teacher Grants. So, thank you for renewing your annual school year memberships.

A special thank you goes to all those who renewed their membership for this school year and included an additional sum above their membership dues. That includes Wayne Rasmussen, Cindy Gaddie, Chris Garcia, Larry Schlich, Dorothy Gong Parker, Edna Gaddie, Joan Fleck, Rosemarie Cartier, and Kathy Reese,

For those of you who have not joined the Foundation membership, consider joining which is only $20 per year. Anybody can join, alumni, parents, Piner supporters, etc. All donations are tax deductible to the extent of the law under our 501(c) (3) non-profit.

Piner High has one of the best High School Science programs in the area with a state-of-the-art planetarium that is nationally recognized, an observatory, and a variety of exceptional pathway programs: —Geospatial Technology; Health, Science & Biotechnology; Culinary Arts; Early College Magnet Program and the University Pathway. Most of these pathways allows Piner students to gain some college credits while attending college classes.

We are still looking for people to join the Foundation Board. We have been working with a below minimum level of board members. Please think about you and possibly a friend joining the Foundation board, so we can continue helping our students get the best tools for learning. If you are interested in helping please call 707-571-7420 and leave a message so we can call you back. The Piner High Athletic Hall of Fame is also looking for new Board Members. If you are interest in that area, you can leave a message also at 707-571-7420.

The Piner Hall of Fame would like to thank the owners of Berry's Market, Pat Berry ('68) and Gayle LaForce Berry ('71) for their continued quarterly donations to the HOF's non-profit organization. It is very much appreciated.

Class Reunion for '70,'71,'72 Was a Huge Success!

The combined 50th reunion for the classes of 1970, '71 and '72 was a great success. Approximately 250 alumni, teachers and administrators and their guests attended the event held at the Agatha Furth Center in Windsor on October 29, 2022. Committee members included Ed Taan ('71), Claire Morey Taan ('70), Magdalena Almeraz Hurt ('71), Cheryl Pedronceli Bennett (71), Joan Fleck (71), Cheryl Pederson ('72), Martha Bastoni Messana ('70), Fran DuMelle ('70) and Bob Williams ('70). Scott Garcia ('74) and his bar tending crew volunteered to serve the wine, beer, water and soft drinks, just as they do each year for our annual crab feed. Gail Laughlin Pippi and Joan Knott ('69) also volunteered as drink ticket sellers.

There was a home football game the night before the reunion and many attended despite it being a very cold night. The day after the reunion, Piner alumni were treated to a campus tour, escorted by the principal, Mrs. Correa. The tour included Piner's very impressive SPARQ Center, with Piner teacher and STEM Coordinator, Kurt Kruger demonstrating how the observatory and planetarium work, resulting in some jaw dropping amazement.

Patagonia's whales catch sea lions off the beach, New Zealand's orcas root out hidden stingrays, and Norway's sea giants master the tail slap.
